It's NOT paranoia when they ARE out to get you ...

The day the government changed the law of "double-jeopardy", and after hundreds of years made it possible for a Briton to be tried twice for the same offence, I knew there was a special reason behind it. Forget the propaganda about new scientific advances and DNA etc, the sole reason for changing the law was to drag those suspected of the murder of Steven Lawrence back into court time after time until there was a guilty verdict. Sadly I have been proved right. Gary Dobson and Dave Norris are to face charges of the murder of Steven Lawrence in November. Dobson was cleared of the murder in 1996, but as the establishment are determined to pin the murder on somebody, then the law was changed to accommodate that. What will happen if there is a not guilty verdict again? Trial three, or even trial four?

When a government changes the law, not for the greater good, but for political expediency, then that government is morally corrupt.

We told you so ...

In our last issue we warned against western government leaders taking sides in the various Middle East "revolutions" that are the current fashions. The US and Britain both supported the overthrow of Egyptian President Mubarek, only now to see him replaced by a ruling council which has opened the Rafah crossing from Egypt into Gaza, a move which has infuriated Israel, and officially recognised the radical Islamist Muslim Brotherhood as a legitimate political party.

When will the West learn to leave Middle-East politics to the Arabs?

BRITAIN WITHDRAWS FROM IRAQ

But was it worth it?

History will record that the last British troops finally left Iraq on May 23rd 2011, when a small contingent of Royal Naval personnel completed their task of training Iraqi sailors to defend their territorial waters. Britain invaded Iraq in April 2003, to seize, destroy and prevent the use of "Weapons of mass destruction" by the ruling regime of Saddam Hussein.

Of course we all know now that the weapons never existed and we were taken into a war on a lie. But was it all worth it?

The Justification

Some will say that Britain's invasion of Iraq was worth it because it led to the overthrow of the dictator Saddam Hussein and his vicious regime. But if the behaviour of a country's rulers were grounds for regime change by outsiders then why have we not invaded Zimbabwe, where the maniac leader, Mugabe routinely subjects his population to mass starvation and brutal beatings?

Instead, we invaded a largely pro-western country where Muslim extremists were almost non-existent. We now leave that country in the hands of corrupt politicians and local warlords.

The Cost

The financial cost was in the region of £10 million, but 179 British lives were sacrificed in a war that was not Britain's Business. Hundreds of others returned with injuries that shattered their young lives, and many have to depend on charity for support.

Oil: The motivation for War

Was it Worth It?

In purely financial terms the answer is yes!

Our £10 million investment enabled an oil consortium led by British Petroleum to win a contract to develop Rumalia oil field, the largest oil field in Iraq.

The Rumalia field is estimated to hold 3.3 trillion cubic feet of oil reserves, and we all know that this war was all about oil. The motivation was even confirmed by Alan Greenspan, the former chairman of the US Reserve who said in 2010, "Everyone knows, the Iraq war is all about oil!"

The invasion and the war that followed could not even be justified on humanitarian grounds. Tens of thousands of Iraqi civilians were killed in the fighting and today the survivors are as poor as ever, with corrupt politicians taking as much of the country's revenue as Saddam and his henchmen. Did the war bring peace to Iraq? No! In fact as this article is being written, news is coming in that a series of bombings in the capital, Baghdad, had claimed the lives of 16 people, with a further 10 policemen killed by a bomb in a Shiite district.

In Britain, parents continue to mourn their dead sons. Wives, children, and girlfriends grieve over the loss of beloved husbands, fathers, and boyfriends. All had signed up to defend Britain and the British people, but were ultimately sacrificed for oil in a foreign country.

So was it worth it? Ask the Iraqi peasants still trying to scrape a living from their devastated and polluted fields, ask those that grieve for loved ones needlessly sacrificed, and ask those brave young men now being fitted for prosthetic limbs and hoping one day to be able to walk again.

Ask them, then listen and learn.

LET BRITONS FIGHT FOR BRITAIN

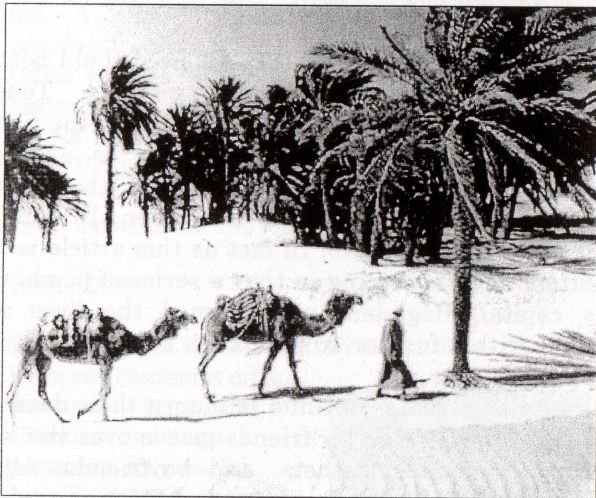

NEWS AROUND BRITAIN

Britain is the Most Generous Nation in the World (Except to its Own People)

In an official report released at the recent G8 summit in France it was revealed that Britain gives a higher percentage of its Gross Domestic Product (GDP) in foreign aid than any other country in the world!

As British hospitals and libraries close through lack of funds, public service workers lose their jobs, and 100 British families lose their homes every day because they can't afford to pay the mortgage, Britain continues to give away over £8.5 billion pounds in overseas aid!

Over 250,000 British families have fallen behind with their mortgage payments, while our government has announced it will be donating £110 million of taxpayers money to Tunisia and Egypt to assist them with the formation of a new political infrastructure.

Tunisia: Will receive a share of £110 million

The recently introduced austerity measures including wage freezes, a rise in national insurance and VAT, will mean an average family with two children will see their income reduce by £1000 a year.

Not content with the great giveaway of our money, the Prime Minister has announced plans to enshrine in law that Britain will donate 0.7% of national income every year in overseas aid.

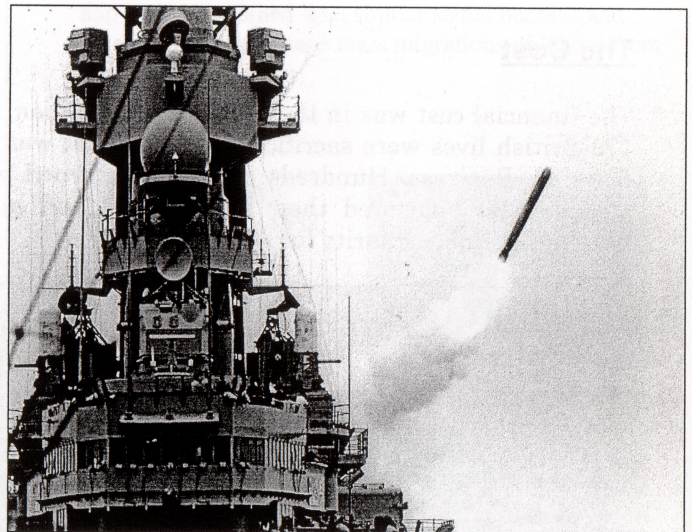

Since 2004 Britain has increased its overseas aid donations by 74%.

UK Interference in Libya Will Cost over £1 billion

Britain's interference in Libya's civil war is costing an estimated £38 million every week and is expected to reach at least £1 billion by late summer. This is far higher than the "tens of millions" Chancellor George Osborne quoted in March to achieve regime change in Libya.

Since the beginning of the regime change campaign, British planes have flown more missions than those from any other country and the Royal Navy have fired over 20 "Tomahawk" missiles at a cost of £1 million each. The cost of the campaign has already exceeded £300 million.

The Coalition government has refused to comment so far as to how much they will donate to rebuild the country in the event of a rebel victory.

Another £1 million of British Taxpayers money goes up in smoke

Griffin Proposes New BNP Leadership Contest

Nick Griffin

Nick Griffin has unveiled his plans for rapid constitutional reform which include changes to the way the party leader and Advisory council are chosen. The proposals will be put to an EGM and will include the introduction of fixed-term appointments for four or five years. This Mr Griffin feels, will give more stability to the party and end the annual leadership challenges which have disrupted the party in the past. If the proposals are accepted, then a new leadership contest could be held as early as this summer. In a revolutionary new concept, any member could stand as long as they obtain ten nomination signatures but, they would also have to make a deposit which would only be returnable if the candidate polled at least 5% of the vote.

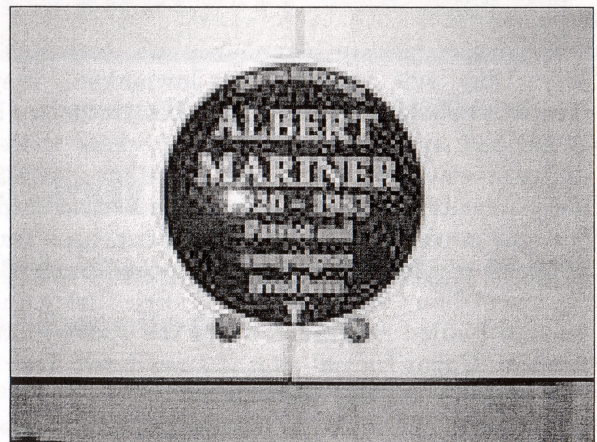

Mr Griffin had planned to stand down as party leader in 2013 but has confirmed that he would stand as a leadership candidate if the new constitutional system was adopted.

NF Honour Albert Mariner

On Saturday 30th of April, East London members of the National Front unveiled a blue plaque on the flat where former member, Albert Mariner lived until his violent death in 1983. The group then went to Albert's grave and laid a wreath and held a short memorial service.

On the 3rd of May 1983, pensioner Albert Mariner was walking to a National Front election meeting in Haringey with a group of friends when they were attacked by a left-wing mob. Albert was struck on the head by a brick and died in hospital of his injuries the following day.

TORY PEERS JOIN THE CRIMINAL CLASSES

The Parliament of England evolved from the Magnum Concillium or "Great Council" that advised the King in medieval times. This council comprised of the major landowners of the country including Lords of the Manor and senior members of the church. The first Parliament was held in 1295 and was made up of members of the aristocracy, Lords, Earls and Barons, and the church, by Archbishops, Bishops and Abbots. Then, as now, the primary task of the Lords was to scrutinise and debate proposed introduction of new legislation, or amendments to existing legislation. In brief, they are part of Britain's lawmaking process.

Members of the House of Lords do not get paid, although they get an attendance allowance of about £300 a day and expenses. As lawmakers, they are expected to be honest and honourable, but every barrel has its bad apples! Unfortunately, where there is a system of expenses, there are those who will falsify their claims and steal money from the British taxpayer. Following revelations of large scale expenses fraud in the House of Commons, which saw the former Labour MPs David Chaytor, Elliot Morley, Eric Illsley and Jim Devine all jailed for fraud. When the spotlight turned on to the "Upper House" as it is known, two Tory peers were quickly identified as suspects.

Lord Taylor of Warwick was given the honour of becoming the first ever black Conservative peer when he joined the Lords in 1996.

Lord Taylor: Peer of the Realm and a Thief!

But, following a court case at Southwark Crown Court in May this year. Lord Taylor also became the first black Conservative peer to be jailed for fraud! His crime was to falsely claim his main residence was in Oxford, while living in London allowing him to claim over £11,000 in travel and subsistence expenses. All paid for by the British taxpayer!

The second Tory peer to face trial was Lord Hanningfield, (pictured below) the former leader of Essex County Council who was another political appointee to the Lords in 1998. The peer opted to be charged under his "commoner" name, Paul White.

Somewhat ironically for a former Essex Councillor, he faced six charges of false accounting at the county's Chelmsford Crown Court.

The prosecution alleged that White had fraudulently claimed over £14,000 for overnight stays in London when in fact he had returned to his Essex home most times. His Lordship denied the charges but his defence fell apart when it was revealed that he had claimed overnight stays in London on a night he was actually on a plane bound for India!

He will be sentenced in two weeks time.

Perhaps the most worrying part of these events is that both men on release from prison will be able to retake their seats in the House of Lords and continue to be part of our lawmaking process. Surely, corrupt politicians should be banned from office for life?

Nation Europa

Brussels Immigration and Crime Blight Schengen Agreement

With a massive influx of migrants from Tunisia and Libya, the European Commission, the main architect of the Schengen Agreement, which abolished internal border controls in 1985, is now calling for the agreement to be reformed. Also, the EU Commissioners are proposing to suspend the section of the agreement that forces asylum seekers and illegal immigrants to be sent back to the country where they first entered the EU.

The change of policy has come about following the arrival of 25,000 immigrants into Italy from Tunisia

Migrants Arrive By the Boatload in Italy

The Italian government, whose lack of effective border controls created the problem, simply issued them all with temporary visas which allowed them to travel to other European countries. Unfortunately for France, most Tunisians speak French and that's where they headed.

Over a 1000 North Africans have set up temporary camps close to the Gare du Nord railway station where some hope to be able to jump a fast train to Britain and a lifetime of generous benefits.

Others have already made the trip to Calais and set up ramshackle camps near to the port, again hoping to sneak into Britain.

In what is viewed as a deliberately provocative move many of the camps are flying the Tunisian flag!

Charity workers in Paris have been serving free food to up to 400 immigrants at each camp. Many others, who intend staying in France have simply disappeared into the country's large North African community.

Talks have taken place between the French President Nicolas Sarkozy and Britain's David Cameron, both of whom are against suspending the rules regarding repatriation, although a recent ruling by the European Court of Human Rights declared that it was an unlawful act by Belgium to repatriate a refugee from Afghanistan, who had originally arrived illegally in Greece, back to Athens. The Court ruled it would be an infringement of his "human rights".

The Leader of the French National Front, and Euro MEP, Marine Le Pen, visited the Italian Island of Lampedusa which has borne the brunt of Tunisian and Libyan immigration, to view for herself the scale of the problem.

The picturesque island has a permanent population of 6000, but has been swamped by tens of thousands of immigrants arriving by boat. Over 8000 were being held in specially erected holding centres, while others had been granted temporary visas allowing them to travel to other European countries.

The deputy-mayor of Lampedusa, a member of Italy's patriotic Northern League, told Ms Le Pen that over 100 Italian army personnel had to be drafted on to the Island to stop the immigrants disrupting the lives of the residents. Ms Le Pen spoke to several of the immigrants and explained that while she had a lot of compassion for their situation, "they were not welcome in Europe."

Look Back at History

Fascism in Britain: (Part 1)

THE IMPERIAL FASCIST LEAGUE

In pre-war Europe, Fascism was a legitimate political alternative to the establishment parties. Italy and Spain had strong Fascist support, and Fascist parties were being formed in Belgium, Holland, and the Irish Republic. In Britain, there were several Fascist parties, and Fascist candidates were being elected as councillors in various parts of the country. The best known British Fascist party was undoubtedly Sir Oswald Mosley's British Union of Fascists formed in 1932. But a well organised predecessor to Mosley's BUF was the Imperial Fascist League, run by Arnold Leese.

Arnold Spencer Leese was born in Lytham, Lancashire in 1878. The family moved to Southport a few years later, where the young Arnold grew up. Leaving school he soon found an intended career in accountancy was not for him. Instead he began to attend veterinary college, qualifying as a vet in 1903. This was the high point of the British Empire, and Leese (pictured right) was able to work in the 'Indian Civil Veterinary Department', before moving on to a similar post in British East Africa (Kenya).

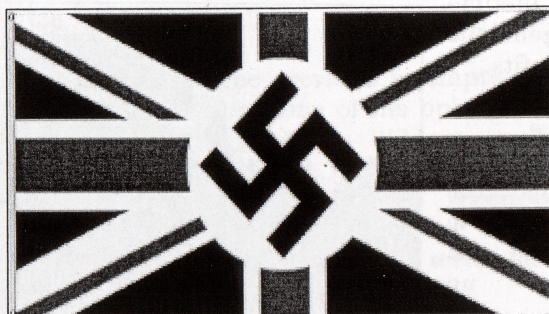

Following the outbreak of the First World War in 1914, he was commissioned as a lieutenant in the Royal Army Veterinary Corps, later being promoted to captain. It was whilst serving in the Middle East that Leese first became aware of the methods of 'ritual slaughter' used by members of the Jewish and Moslem faiths to produce 'Kosher' and 'Halal' meat. This involved (and still involves) the animal having its throat cut without first being 'stunned' and then being left to bleed to death in agony. Some consider it was the 'horror' of seeing this that turned Arnold Leese into a committed anti-Semite.

Political awakening came in the 1920's - the decade of the Depression and the General Strike. Britons betrayed by the establishment parties looked for new ideas and new policies. On the 6th of May 1923 Miss Rotha Lintorn-Orman found the 'British Fascists' (also known as the 'British Fascisti').

Leese joined the 'BF' a year later after being impressed by the Mussolini regime in Italy. But disagreeing with some of their policies, he did not remain a member for long. In the 1924 General Election the Conservative Party had promised to 'fight socialism', but failed to put up candidates to oppose the Left in Stamford Borough Council's local ballot. Disgusted by this, Leese and a colleague Harry Simpson, decided to stand as 'Fascist' candidates. To the astonishment of the entire town, both were elected. After serving his allotted three years in office, Leese declined re-election as he was leaving the area. Simpson however did stand again, and gained a second term as councillor.

In 1928 Leese moved to Guildford and set up his own London-based independent 'Imperial Fascist League' together with brigadier-general D.Erskine Tulloch, Major J.Baillie and L.H. Sherrard.

The IFL's first insignia consisted of an oval badge carrying a brass 'fasces' emblem on black background, and was clearly based on Italian practice. But in 1934, Mussolini's support for Jewish immigration to British-controlled Palestine caused the League to replace it with a new design. This was circular, and featured an 'NSDAP'-style swastika superimposed upon the 'Union Jack' surmounted by a 'British Lion'. The same combination was also used on IFL armbands and flags

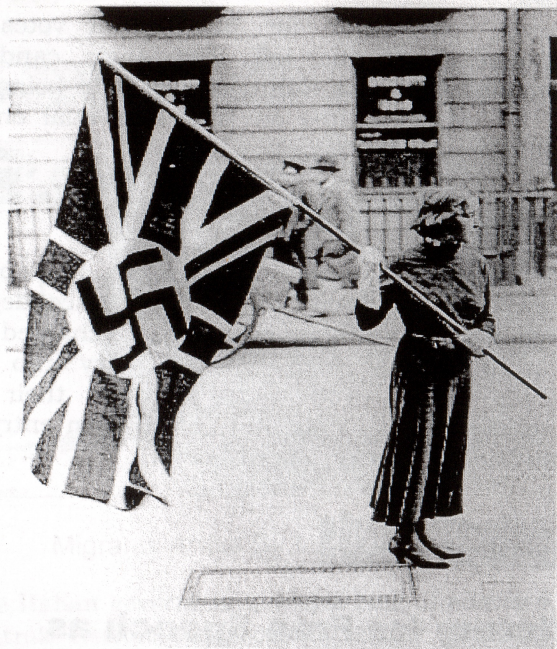

FASCISM in BRITAIN

Continued ...

L.H. Sherrard was leader of the IFL's paramilitary 'Fascist guard' section but this was disbanded following the 1936 Public Order Act. Leese became Director-General six months later, remaining in that position until 1939 when the government forced the League to close down.

In the early 1930's the IFL faced competition from Sir Oswald Mosley's newly created 'British Union of Fascists'. Not for the last time, members of the 'Right' fought each other whilst the left looked on and laughed. In 1933, an IFL meeting in Trinity Hall, Great Portland Street was attacked by a large group of BUF supporters and broken up in chaos.

The League's image was not helped by its use of National Socialist style symbols, and in 1935 the Jewish Board of Deputies was already blaming it for 'scores' of anti-race mixing leaflets distributed in Jewish area of Ilford, Essex.

The IFL published a newspaper The Fascist, and in 1936 Leese was sent to prison for six months for publishing "scandalous and libellous statements about Jews, thereby rendering His Majesty's subjects of the Jewish faith liable to suspicion, affront and boycott". Gaining full remission for good behaviour, Leese was released from Wormwood Scrubbs in February 1937, triumphantly exiting through a cheering crowd of fascists assembled at the prison gate. Not to be put off, he then wrote an account of both the trial and the circumstances leading up to it. Published by the IFL in 1938, his book Jewish Ritual Murder: My Irrelevant Defence, remains in print, and since been read by thousands of Nationalists around the world.

His strident views on racial matters bought him praise and support from the notorious Nazi Party official and Nuremberg Regional Governor Julius Streicher.

In 1935 four IFL members visited Germany as the guests of Herr Streicher's informative and widely read newspaper Der Sturmer (the only one Hitler admitted to reading each week from cover to cover). The IFL had done all it could to point out the folly of another World War between Britain and Greater Germany, but was no more successful in influencing events than other British patriotic parties.

After the leading members of the BUF were arrested and interned under the infamous 'Defence Regulation 18B, and Leese was taken into custody. Detention without trial followed, first at Wandsworth and then Brixton Prison. In protest, his wife returned his Great War medals to the King. Only life-threatening illness brought about his release on 2nd February 1944 after three years and four months incarceration. Once out of prison, Leese did not abandon the struggle. That year he started to produce the newsletter Gothic Ripples. Designed, as he said, "to keep already Jew-wise people up-to date in recent developments" (Colin Jordan continued its publication up to his death).

In 1951, Leese was charged with "defamatory libel" against Commissioner of the Metropolitan Police. Leese had written in Gothic Ripples that officers appeared to be under orders to arrest any street corner speakers who dared mention a certain minority 'religious' and 'ethnic' group in any "derogatory" sense. Although he had to conduct his own defence, the course of 'British Justice' was sometimes a little different in those days. In a sharp contrast to today's laws forbidding free speech, the jury took just nine minutes find him 'not guilty'. Following this, Leese received congratulatory messages from all over the White World.

Arnold Spencer Leese died in 1956 aged 78. In his life he had endured war, imprisonment, and hostility from both the left and right of British politics. But never once did he cease his battle for Race and Nation.

France to Follow Switzerland and Deport Immigrant Criminals

Following an upsurge in crime committed by Immigrants and their families, the French Interior Minister, Claude Guerant has pledged to follow the example of the Swiss government and deport Immigrant criminals.

The decision has been provoked by recent figures released which show that 80% of street crime in Paris was being carried out by Romanian immigrants or their children. Figures released by Paris police authorities show that children of Romanian immigrants were responsible for committing four out of every five street thefts such as pickpocketing and bag snatches from cafes. Paris police also claimed that there were "dozens" of Romanian gangs operating in the capital. British tourists arriving at the Gare du Nord station were a favourite target for the criminals.

Marine Le Pen to Stand in Presidential Elections

Marine Le Pen, leader of the patriotic, Front National party has declared that she will be standing as a candidate in next years French Presidential elections. The news of her candidacy was generally welcomed by the French press, but in a total shock to the establishment one newspaper poll predicted that Ms Le Pen (pictured right) could easily beat the current French President, Nicolas Sarkozy in the first round of the elections due to be held in May 2012.

Ms Le Pen only took over the leadership of the party from her father, Jean-Marie Le Pen in January and has already galvanised the party into becoming a real challenge for power. Just recently the party polled over 15% of the regional council votes.

Strong competition for presidential votes was expected from the left, but their candidate, Dominique Strauss-Kahn, is currently being held in the United States on various sexual charges including rape!

Burka Ban Fiasco

Attempts by the French authorities to impose a ban on wearing the burka in public descended into farce when the first two women charged with flouting the ban were refused entry into court because they would not remove their face coverings. Police actually refused them entry into court and the women went home!

Netherlands

Victory for Free Speech as Geert Wilders Acquitted

Dutch patriots celebrated as Geert Wilders, leader of the Dutch, Freedom Party was acquitted on all five charges of "inciting hatred and discrimination" against Muslims. Mr Wilders had consistently denied the charges stating, he has "a problem with Islamic tradition, culture and ideology, not with Muslim people".

There have been three previous attempts to get Mr Wilders into court because of his opinions. At the conclusion of the case Mr Wilders issued the following statement. "The Netherlands is under threat of Islam. Truth and freedom are inextricably connected. We must speak the truth because otherwise we will lose our freedom".

Nationalists Call for Wartime Amnesty

Flemish nationalist from the Vlaams Belang party have proposed a draft resolution that would give amnesty to the thousands of Flemish patriots that fought with the wartime German forces against the invasion of Europe by Soviet communist forces. The resolution was accepted by the Belgium Senate on a vote 30 for and 26 against. In supporting the proposal, the Belgian Justice Minister Stefan De Clerck, a member of the Flemish Christian-Democrat N-VA party, upset the country's Jewish leaders by calling for an "adult" debate on the subject and suggesting "it was time to maybe also forget" Belgium's wartime past.

Belgian Justice Minister Stefan De Clerck Calls for an Adult Debate on Amnesty

Flemish nationalist parties have been campaigning for an amnesty for over 20 years. The current proposal would grant an amnesty to all those judged to have collaborated with the wartime German administration and demands the removal from public records of "sentences and sanctions inflicted on the grounds of alleged breaches of public loyalty". It also demands compensation for "financial prejudice suffered by victims of post-war repression or their descendants".

During the war, almost 2000 Belgian Walloons volunteered for the pro-German Walloon Legion and approximately 3000 Flemings joined the Flemish equivalent.

In addition, 14,000 Walloons and Flemings fought in the Wehrmacht and Waffen SS under German colours. Political cooperation was far greater in Flanders where many areas were governed not by the German occupation authorities, but by Flemish nationalists from the Vlaams Nationaal Verbond.

Call to Remember German Post-War Expellees

German establishment political parties and nationalist groups have joined forces to campaign for an annual memorial day to remember the fate of the 12 million Germans who were expelled from territories in Eastern Europe at the end of World War 2. The ethnic cleansing was carried out by Communist occupation forces in Poland and other newly created Soviet satellite states. The expulsions were forced, and over 1 million are believed to have perished during, and as a result of the expulsions. Jewish groups and left-wing historians have condemned the proposal as "revisionist and an attempt to avoid German wartime guilt".

HOME OFFICE LAUNCH NATIONAL INQUIRY INTO MUSLIM GROOMING GANGS

Was there a conspiracy of silence?

The Home Office are to launch a nationwide investigation into the grooming of vulnerable white girls for sex by gangs of British Pakistani men, following the successful prosecutions of gangs of Muslim men in Northern England and the West Midlands.

A specialist child abuse unit from the Child Exploitation and Online Protection Centre (Ceop) is to lead the inquiry and will investigate whether or not the problem has been deliberately suppressed for fear of generating racial tensions.

Detective Chief Inspector, Alan Edwards of West Mercia police has been quoted as saying "these girls are being passed around and being used as meat. To stop this type of crime you need to start talking about it, but everyone has been too scared to address the ethnicity factor".

"Ceop", which is affiliated to the Serious Organised Crime Agency will start their inquiry as far back as 1997, when the problem of Muslim men grooming vulnerable white girls for illegal sex first came to light. The heart of the problem seems to be reluctance by the police and social services to acknowledge that there was a racial element at the very core of the issue!

Since 1997 there have been 53 Asian men, mainly British born Muslims of Pakistani heritage, convicted of sex crimes against underage white girls. The ages of victims range from 11 -16 years-old. Unnamed police officers have claimed that these convictions represent a "tidal wave" of offending in Yorkshire, Lancashire, Manchester and the Midlands.

Even Jack Straw, the former Home Secretary and Labour MP for Blackburn, has admitted that these types of crimes were a "specific problem" in the Pakistani community, and that some men of Pakistani origin viewed white girls as "easy meat".

That the practice is widespread was demonstrated when Greater Manchester police arrested two men, both Asians from Rochdale on suspicion of a range of sex offences. These arrests take the total number of men arrested on suspicion of being part of an Asian gang that specialised in grooming for sex young white girls as young as 13 years-old. Many of the girls were enticed into "relationships" with older Asian youths only to be then deliberately addicted to heroin and crack, and then be forced to work as prostitutes.

Predictably, the alleged cover-up by police and social services has led to an increase in racial tension, with Sikh and Hindu community leaders also complaining that young girls from their communities were also being targeted by Muslim gangs.

STEVEN BOOKS

PART OF THE SUNWHEEL GROUP OF COMPANIES A FUND RAISING ADJUNCT OF THE LEAGUE OF ST GEORGE

This August will mark the 44th anniversary of the murder of one of Western Europe's most charismatic National Socialist leaders, George Lincoln Rockwell. To mark this anniversary, Steven Books are selling this reprint of Rockwell's masterpiece for just £15 including postage.

It would be difficult to imagine a more difficult or dangerous political project: the founding of an avowedly National Socialist party in the USA. in the aftermath of of WWII. Yet this is what George Lincoln Rockwell did in the early 1960s. With a combination of political skill and amazing personal courage he led the American Nazi Party to nationwide fame-or notoriety, depending on your point of view.

This candid autobiography reveals the real Rockwell, giving the reader a fascinating insight into the mind of one of the most remarkable Americans of recent times.

Priced at just £15 including p&p
